Decision Barometer

Byron Sherwin, in his book "Why Be Good", has this to say about making moral decisions:

"There is a simplified summary of it in an often-quoted remark of Ernest Hemingway: 'What I feel good after is probably moral. What I don't feel good after probably is not.'

"Yet feelings are not a reliable barometer for making moral decisions. Feelings are fickle. They change. Love becomes hate, friends become enemies, hopes become disappointments. To be sure, being good and feeling good are not necessarily the same thing. Doing good usually demands discipline, effort, and sometimes sacrifice."

Given the fact that people seem to have an almost limitless capacity for rationalizing their actions, feelings can't always be relied on as an accurate indicator of morality. Jesus tells us this:

John 14:6

I am the way and the truth and the life.

I love you all,

Tim
