Cracks in the Soul

Natalie Keegan with The Sun writes:

It may sound like a small detail — but the shape of a plane's windows is actually really important. In the past, square windows were all the rage and many early plane designs featured them.

However, by the time the 1950s rolled around, the commercial jetliner rose to fame — and this is when problems began to surface. The new planes were capable of flying at greater speeds and at higher altitudes than those of the past, but two of them soon fell apart, disintegrating midair — all because of square shaped windows.

This may sound bizarre, but it all comes down to the sharp corners on a square. The corners are natural weak spots, more likely to be stressed and weakened by air pressure changes and as such are a recipe for disaster when it comes to air travel. Curved windowpanes, however, have no focal point and distribute stress evenly — reducing the possibility of cracks or breaks.

We all have weak spots in our lives and sharp corners that can crack under the stress of daily life on this Earth. And when cracks appear, breaks can sometimes follow. But even in these times of trial, God still loves you, God is for you, and He wants to guide you through the difficulties you are facing. The question is will you let Him?

1 Peter 5:7

<sup>7</sup> Cast all your anxiety on him because he cares for you.

I love you all,

Tim
